My mother, Adonia, bravely fought cancer for several years, and it was beyond doubt that she would fight it to the best of her abilities. Despite the odds, she remained optimistic and persisted living life to the fullest. For that, I am eternally grateful that we were able to spend her final years together as a family.

Losing a mother is a challenging new reality to comprehend. I wish I could still kiss her goodbye and tell her she means the world to me. In the end, she has found the serenity she deserves, and her struggles are finally over. Let's forever keep and remember Adonia in our hearts and minds, just as she was.
